

OAK WEEKLY

Week 2—Monday 30th March to Friday 3rd April

Miss Crockett's update:

Last week, you impressed me, but this week you have impressed me even more! I have been sent so many fantastic videos and pictures this week that it's been tricky to keep up! Well done for continuing to work so hard. You are making Miss Norman and I very proud.

The end of this week sees the start of the Easter holidays. Although it may not be exactly how you had planned it, I hope you have a fun and relaxing break. Remember to keep helping your families, keep checking up on each other and keep smiling. Best wishes.

Speed Tables Success!

It's been another brilliant week for Ed, beating his record again with 132/144. Well done, Ed!

Riddle!

What has a neck, but no head?

Answer: A bottle.

On the menu tonight...

is Katie's delicious chicken and leek pie. From chopping, to cooking the filling, to rolling the pastry, to cutting out the decorations, Katie made the whole pie singlehandedly. Very impressive, Katie!

Learning Power Achievers!

There are a lot of learning powers to be handed out for your Pig Heart Diary entries this week— what enjoyable reads they were! Earning 'Try Your Best' powers were: Ephram and Honour. 'Improve things' was given to: Amelie, Logan, Kit and Toby R. 'Persevere' was given to Benji and Josh and 'Challenge Yourself' was given to Jack. Well done all!

Community Spirit!

Toby G supported a local priest this week by putting purple curtains over the statues and crosses ready for the online Easter masses. Well done for giving up your time for others, Toby.

Beccy created this stunning sunflower piece of art.

Megan has been busy crocheting.

Benji has finally sent me a cat selfie! He has also made some cheese straws.

Benjamin drew an excellent diagram of a heart and wrote a book review on the school website.

What else have Oak been up to?

Toby H has been practising a new song on the piano.

Luke made a tricky course in his garden... and a delicious cake!

Charlotte has been decorating pebbles and taking part in Joe Wicks' workouts.

Caitlin T and I created rainbow stained glass windows.

Jessica was inspired by Van Gogh.

Katie has been painting rainbow coloured eggs.

Isla has been testing out her foot-balling techniques on her siblings.

Jack has been learning British Sign Language.

Alyssa was inspired by a poem that she saw online. I think it is a thoughtful reflection on current times.

Honour has been exploring.

Josh used excellent 'Show Me Don't Tell Me' sentences in his Pig Heart Boy story. I can really visualise mum's reaction to the news.

Mum and Dad sat anxiously in the depressing waiting room. Mum bit her already chewed nails while Dad calmly read a gardening magazine. This annoyed Mum greatly. Why was he so confident that all would be well?

Dr Bryce shuffled into the room with his head down. He glanced up nervously whilst approaching them. This instantly worried Mum.

"The operation is complete and... hmmm... it failed. Cam is no longer with us," Dr Bryce sorrowfully hesitated to tell them.

Mum was mortified. She SCREAMED and fell to her knees in dismay.

"I told you it wouldn't work, but of course you didn't listen to me."

"I thought it would work," Dad snapped back. "At least I hoped it would work." He began to sob.

Dr Bryce looked on awkwardly.

"Hmph," Mum breathed heavily through her nose. "I'm going to tell Marlon now," she said indignantly.

"Go do that then," Dad mumbled sadly under his breath.

Mum picked up her phone with trembling hands as Dad sobbed quietly, and dialled Marlon's number unsteadily. She nervously put the receiver to her ear.

"Hello?" she asked.

"Hi," replied Marlon.

"I have news about Cam."

"What is it?" Marlon asked anxiously.

"Cam... has died." Mum struggled to get her words out.

"Noooooo," Marlon cried out in despair.

Suddenly, the phone line went dead. Marlon had gone. Mum crumbled in the corner of the deadly quiet waiting room as huge heavy sobs began to escape her exhausted body.
